JUTE COLLECTION · 2016

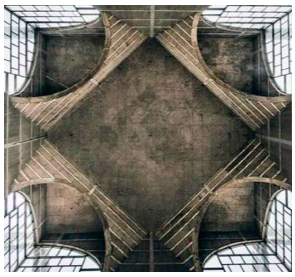

Beauty of Concrete

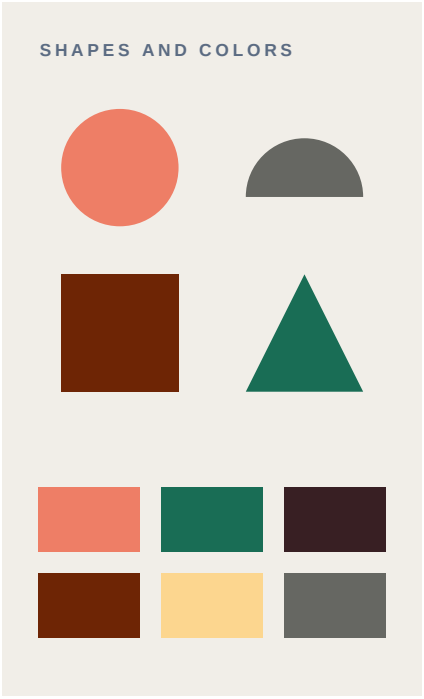

Formal wear in jute-cotton fabric, inspired by Louis Kahn’s National Assembly Building in Dhaka.

INSPIRATION: NATIONAL ASSEMBLY BUILDING, DHAKA, BY LOUIS KAHN

This collection is inspired by Louis Kahn’s National Assembly Building in Dhaka. The building is made from simple shapes (circles, half circles, squares, and triangles) taken from traditional Bengali forms. I used these shapes and colors in my garments.

I wanted to make sustainable clothing, so I chose a jute-cotton blend fabric (67% jute, 33% cotton) for these formal jackets, with a silk lining. The fabric gives them a firm, structured look.

JUTE AS A SUSTAINABLE OPTION

Jute is a natural fiber, often called the golden fiber of Bangladesh. It is biodegradable, recyclable, and low cost. On its own, jute is too stiff and coarse for most clothing, so it is often blended with cotton to soften the fabric. I chose a jute-cotton blend because it keeps the benefits of a natural fiber and is wearable. Consumer perception of these garments has also been studied: consumers responded positively to jute-blended garments and showed a favorable intention to buy them.

TRADITIONAL AND CULTURAL WEAR · RAJSHAHI SILK

Silkways

Silkways is a collection of traditional kurta sets made in Rajshahi silk. Rajshahi silk is a premium, world-renowned textile from the Rajshahi region of Bangladesh. It is known for its soft texture, its liquid-like drape, and its royal heritage. It received Geographical Indication (GI) status in 2021, and its history goes back to the 13th century. It is called the “Queen of Fibers” in the region. I chose it because it is a unique and sustainable fabric.
